

Intended changes to the FCC regulations on ISPs by title II will cause the public unfair distress with a possible tiered playing field under the monopolies which many current cable companies represent (lack of choice in many suburban areas).

As the US government has reverted many programs and services to internet based it will place unfair and possibly impossible time limits on site access if ISPs can adjust speeds at will. This adjustment to the law is not a change that was requested by the people and since society is embracing a life infused with an online presence it is in the FCC's mandate to respond to the public wishes, not corporate desires. Please do not remove the net neutrality rules currently protecting the US public's use of the internet.

Thank you
James Thompson